Graham,

Whilst you confirm this, I believe this is not what the applicant will use it for, or fully understands what a d2 use would restrict him to.as there is documentation that implies that you or he believes a hairdresser is an ancillary use to a D2.

That may be the case if one was located within a gym building, but not a stand alone building. Especially if that building were used primarily as a A1 use, that would be a separate planning unit.

I want to ensure that you and your client are fully aware that you need to apply for what your endgame is. Not what you hope to achieve which will lead again to enforcement or refusal.

It is everyone's benefit, including your clients that the end use is clarified now. As D2 is assembly and leisure only.
